what is going wrong? thanks, mukesh kumar Thursday, September 30, 2010 Demolition of structures in Moscow and St. Petersburg go down in history as spectacular and monumental. How do they look, these buildings with their built-in-intellect, these magnificent cities, built up in the highest traditions of art, culture, education and industry, and even then, so abruptly turned into a terrible collective cemetery? You can read all about it in A Hundred Million Tons of Mother Russia.

Monday, September 6, 2010 We've interviewed music critic Alexander Spirin and we've released his CD of readings in Verse-Songs. The background to this project was the opening of a new music department and a consequent need to find more interesting texts for readings. The work is compositional and substantially extracts from different Russian operas - he's done in the years 1991-1995. Spirin's music is characterized by musical voice (although he admits he was not a very good singer) and detail. Songs are poetic and lyrical, often set in grotesque ways, slightly resembling the Jerzy Stuhr in form, but the key word here is "lyrical"❖
