The objective of this proposal is to characterize erythroid specific proteins in malignant myeloid lines derived from patients with chronic myelogenous leukemia and aplastic anemia. It has been demonstrated that specific proteins are characteristic of the erythroid lineage; in normal cells, the majority of hemoglobin-synthesizing polypeptides detected are glycosylated, as compared to the myeloid cells in which the major polypeptides are nonglycosylated. Glycosylation of the erythroid cell-specific proteins will be studied by a variety of methods. Erythrocytes will be obtained from patient samples. The levels of erythrocyte-specific glycoproteins will be determined in order to assess the status of erythroid cell maturation. Erythrocyte specific glycoproteins will be isolated and their carbohydrate structure elucidated by a number of techniques. The erythroid and myeloid cell-specific polypeptides will be separated and their amino acid composition determined. L-
