Friday, June 8, 2008 Back to la Vedette...... On Sunday 27th March 2008 David and I set off in the car for Paris – we arrived in the City of Light on the 27th of the month, with lots of time to spare for my session on Monday. We had managed to take in the 'Le Panthéon' and then we popped into 'Le Clos des Moulin' and I fell in love with this restaurant. I have now used this in our series of ensembles for a couple of weddings, and decided to go back on my last visit to the City to get a feel of the place. The restaurant is hidden away in Rue d'Arcole, just behind Rue de la Tournelle. Here you have a sweeping gravel driveway in front of you, leading to a discreet gate. The entrance is even more discreetly hidden by a small sign on the lower portion of the gate. You have to be quietly sensible as you walk up to the front door, and then you are quietly ushered into an airy, relaxed, yet rather elegant restaurant. It is very easy to be lulled into a sense of calm in this restaurant. It is the kind of place that you wander round and spot an interesting table and just take a seat. It is not until you are sitting with your meal in front of you that you realise you have arrived at the restaurant, and also realise that we have the perfect spot for a couple of friends who had come to 'see' me. (We knew it would be impossible to keep a secret from our guests...) There are just a few tables, in a fairly small area. The rest of the tables are now filled with people enjoying a lunch or a leisurely meal. I would recommend the French set menu for the reason that it is very straightforward and not too complicated. You are not expected to juggle many dishes at the same time. If you wanted to select something a little more exotic, the list of wines would be just as impressive. My main recommendation is a glass of the Frapin F1, or Frapin F2 at a reasonable price. I had the 'choucroute' which is crisp and fresh, and a fun starter for the evening ahead of me. I was very glad of my starter, as I finished it feeling rather hungry. However, the meal had arrived and I did not wish 570a42141b
