In 1530 he was outlawed and forced to go into exile. He returned to England in 1534, but was again outlawed and imprisoned, spending some time in the Fleet Prison. In 1537 he was exiled once more and in 1538 was imprisoned once more, although his status as a recusant was probably in doubt. In 1545 he became one of the escheators for Northumberland. In 1561 he was living at Brougham, Northumberland, and was apparently still alive at the time of his father's will in 1563, although the date of his birth is not known. Brougham's date of death is listed as 1573 in the Register of the Public Wills Burghal records. his wife was Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Brabazon, and their children included: Henry Brougham, ancestor of the Broughams of Blagdon Hall William Brougham of Calton Thomas Brougham of Newburgh John Brougham of Kinnerton References Category:16th-century English people Category:Year of birth unknown Category:1573 deaths Category:People from Northumberland (before 1974)New York City Attorney General Eric Schneiderman (D) announced on Thursday that he will seek to block a $50 billion settlement between Exxon Mobil Corp. and more than 100 plaintiffs seeking damages in connection with the 1989 Exxon Valdez oil spill, saying the amount was too small and the compensation was not commens ca3bfb1094
