Risk factors for nosocomial infection with Klebsiella pneumoniae in a neonatal intensive care unit. To identify risk factors associated with nosocomial infection with K. pneumoniae. Prospective, controlled study. Preterm neonatal intensive care unit at a university hospital. The 1231 neonates admitted to the unit in the 10 months before and after a measure was instituted to prevent K. pneumoniae infection. During the study period, 6 of the 1231 neonates had infections caused by K. pneumoniae, which was a rate of infection of 5.2/1000 admissions. Two of the infants died. Nosocomial infection with K. pneumoniae was acquired most often via skin flora. Age less than 3 days was associated with increased risk of infection (p = 0.014) and was also correlated with a higher rate of mortality. The use of central venous catheters was associated with a higher risk of infection (p = 0.005). A multivariate model of risk factors was created. It can be used to predict likelihood of nosocomial infection with K. pneumoniae.We're suckers for our cats. (See our cat stories.) When I got married, my wife and I kept our cats as pets but soon found that they had several jobs on the farm. Cats provide a whole additional set of reasons to become attached to animals. Some cats work as nurses, hunt birds and rodents for us, guard us, and are just as independent as dogs. Trip Trap: The Sure Thing Scent hounds such as my two cats, Blanche and Bruce, use their noses to detect a wide range of prey animals, as well as threats to their owners. In one day of travel, Blanche had detected and killed at least two mice and a few small birds. I've seen Blanche working on the road, lapping up the scent of a rabbit or dog. Bruce has hunted wolves and lynxes for me, and a friend told me a story about a sheep dog that Bruce had a fight with on a meadow. I passed the story along to me, hoping Bruce would have a lucky day with a coyote. When he returned to the car, he meowed that he had caught a lamb and passed it back to me. My cat-assisted treasure hunt was complete. I've had several dogs in my life, including the seven-foot-tall dog that my grandfather brought to my farm in Oklahoma City Thunder forward Serge Ibaka will play in the 2014 NBA All-Star Game, the league announced Tuesday. Sergio Ibaka is a close No. 2 to Houston Rockets center Dwight Howard, who will be voted in by fans at All-Star Weekend in New Orleans. Serge Ibaka will make the West team with LeBron James, Blake Griffin, Stephen Curry, Carmelo Anthony, Chris Paul, Russell Westbrook and Zach Randolph. The East squad will feature Kyrie Irving, Derrick Rose, Kobe Bryant, Kevin Durant, Paul George, Jimmy Butler and Kyrie Irving. Ibaka became an integral part of the Thunder's offense last season. He averaged 14.3 points, 8.5 rebounds and 2.3 blocks last season. In the playoffs, Ibaka averaged 14.0 points and a plus-16.6 rating. Ibaka was an All-Star in 2010 after averaging 15.7 points and 10.8 rebounds. The 6-foot-11 Ibaka also won the Kia Defensive Player of the Year Award last season. Ibaka is the fourth Thunder player to make the All-Star team in the last five years. Kevin Durant, Russell Westbrook and Steven Adams were on the All-Star roster last year. The fan voting closed on Jan. 18 and will be tabulated in conjunction with the coaches' ballots. The NBA All-Star Game will be held at the Smoothie King Center in New Orleans on Feb. 15.
