ac and the Gentiles” rather than in Judaism. (I imagine the magic to be some form of what they call the “Faith Circle” today.) Hazretu, I think the secret to a life well-lived is to always keep a balance of sacred and secular in your life. Thank you for your comment. I find it very interesting that the Talmud prohibited women from speaking in public, while Jesus makes this quite clear in his teaching, not to mention that he says it’s to honor the synagogue, which in this case would be the synagogue of God. I think it was done to protect women from G-d’s reaction to their words. I’ve noticed that within Judaism today there seems to be a conflict between “doing Jewish things” and “being a Jewish person.” For example, I would have been required to go to Hebrew school and/or Hebrew College, but I find that some Jews, including Orthodox Jews, are not required to go to religious school or to study Torah. I’ve noticed, as well, that many self-described orthodox Jews allow for themselves more “secular” roles in synagogue, such as reading scripture and giving sermons, etc. Can you clarify whether it’s a problem with the Jews as a group, or just with some of the Jews in your particular situation? Also, I’m glad that you expressed frustration with people who want to go about their lives without religion. Thanks! I’m not sure I understand this question. In most places of worship, you’re required to have a Hora/prayer book with you and to have some familiarity of prayers. You’re also expected to have some form of personal experience with the teachings of religion you’re attending. For example, you can’t just sit in the back, or in the middle, or pick and choose your texts. In light of this requirement, it’s not surprising that there’s a problem. If there were no requirement, then no problem. It’s clearly wrong to have an issue with people who want to be Jewish, yet don’t want to have any personal connection to the teachings or beliefs of being Jewish. Of course, it’s not entirely possible to divorce what a person does from who they are, but, since it’s a requirement
