0] Is there a way to write a function that will take a list of substrings like this: >>> sublist(['ABCD', 'EFGH']) ['ABCD', 'ABCD', 'EFGH', 'EFGH', 'EFGH', 'EFGH'] So that I can pass a list of substrings to my sublist function? A: This problem isn't that hard if you write a recursive function: def find_substrings(in_list): "" Finds all substrings in `in_list` and returns a list of their full lengths. "" if not in_list: return [] else: first = in_list[0] return find_substrings(in_list[1:]) + [first] A: def sublist(string_list): return [x for x in string_list if len(x)>0] to the day-to-day actions and goals of the Institute. Lights On/Lights Off - Doomsday Clock Before the Gravity One shoot, through much discussion, thought, even moments of apprehension, I eventually worked things out into a masterpiece. We shot the video on the West Cliff of Mt. Rainer near the Space Needle and Seattle Center. The kness was a result of the rain and time of day. The lighting was key to making sure it was believable and at the same time having the moon bedeck the sky. With prop stylist Shaun sien and a Seattle Seahawk (I'll note that because he's in the artits credits that he should have been credited with it being his work and that has already been corrected), we set up to shoot this video. I came from my native Geography/Conservation Science background, so this was the first time working outside of a lab, or even in Seattle if that's more on the lab side. This shoot took from the entrance of the Space Needle at 10 am to 1 pm. We got the permit late, so
