.NET Components for Renaming several files in batches This tutorial is the result of a project

submitted in an examination held on February 2009 by IED Software Engineering (TinyClass). IED Software Engineering is a prestigious B2B software development company specialized in projects related to .NET and Java development. Several .NET components are available for Renaming several files in batches.

1. Rename batch With .NET: It is a batch processing program that allows the rename of a list of file in one go. The script is very easy to use and provides a simple interface to rename many files at once. Furthermore, each file is assigned a given number with which the batch can be processed. The very useful function is that you can prepare the script file to be used when the file list is already on your computer.
2. Rename batch with My.Computer.FileSystem: It is a batch processing software that allows the rename of a list of file on your computer in one go. The software is organized in forms and provides a step by step wizard interface to help you to input the information you need. The function offered is easy-to-use and very configurable. The My.Computer.FileSystem approach is fully customizable and allows you to configure the file list to be renamed.
3. VBScript for Rename multiple files: It is a batch processing tool that is aimed at helping you to rename several file one by one. The application requires a .vbs file, which is a script able to interact with Windows Explorer. The software is fully featured and allows you to input the name of the desired destination folder. Once the file is renamed, the script is able to activate the system option to generate a list of the renamed file. Note that all .NET components are fully configurable. Users can add, delete and modify fields to adapt the .NET components to their needs.

As the president of one of the largest private prisons in the United States, GEO Group has been subject to congressional inquiries about its treatment of prisoners and its contract with the federal government. And like other private prison companies, GEO is also the beneficiary of the Trump administration's determination to loosen immigration enforcement. Now, GEO says, it is being forced to fire 100 guards at its detention center in Adelanto, Calif., for calling in sick. According to the Los Angeles Times, which first reported the news, workers at the privately-owned facility said they had called in for the day to protest President Trump's attacks on migrants, and that they had been suspended and threatened with retaliation. "If one of your employees shows up to work sick, you need to know that is not good," the federal agency that contracts with GEO, the Bureau of Prisons, said in a statement. "The B.O.P. is committed to the health and well-being of inmates and employees, and providing safe, professional services to inmates." Any employee of the privately-run prison in Adelanto, a majority-white and largely Latino suburb of Los Angeles, who does not show up for work must be dismissed, according to GEO. Computers were useful and required power for quite a while before the internet brought about a shift in the way we communicated, formed opinions and even managed to build innovative things. For the average average person, the big Internet revolution was around the late 1990s. This was a great shift
