The NoteFrame The NoteFrame is a template that you can apply to any type of document. It usually provides four or five spaces to enter comments or memos. However, if you are interested in converting a notebook into a presentation or printed page, you can use the NoteFrame to create a presentation cover, as shown in Figure 14-4. FIGURE 14-4: Create a presentation cover with the NoteFrame. Follow these steps to create a presentation cover using the NoteFrame: 1. To create your presentation cover, start by opening a blank design. When you open a blank design, you should see a layout that looks like Figure 14-4. 2. Click the View tab, and select the Page Setup option. You see a preset page setup, as shown on the left in Figure 14-5. The Page Setup dialog box appears in Figure 14-5, and gives you the option to set your page size, number of pages, and margins. 3. Click Print. 4. Choose the Open dialog box, navigate to your NoteFrame, and click Open. When you open the document, it appears on-screen, as shown on the right in Figure 14-5. 5. Click the tab to the left of the Note Frame, and select the option that corresponds to the kind of form you want to create. You see four selection options: Cover, Form, Cover + Form, and Document. The Cover option lets you

They add an interesting element to images and are used in Photoshop for retouching, sharpening or creating de-fisheye images. Lighting is necessary for creating good images. It can be achieved in Photoshop by using multiple exposures, brightness adjustments or the HSL color range. The Healing Brush is used for spot healing or removing blemishes from the image. Adjusting brightness, contrast and even color is an important part of the editing process. It can be done using the Hue, Saturation and Lightness tools, or directly within the layers palette. Many of the more recent Photoshop versions have additional tools that are a bit hard to explain. The best way is to try them out and see which ones you like the best.

Locking and Unlocking Pixels. Locking a pixel will freeze it and prevent you from editing it. Locking a pixel will freeze it and prevent you from editing it. Most of the tools in Photoshop have a Lock tool. You can lock a selection, a layer or anything else that you have made. Locking pixels is useful for keeping pixels from being modified while they are still selected or while you are working on them. You can unlock a pixel by hitting Enter. One important thing to note is that in some versions of Photoshop, you can only unlock a pixel by making a selection around it. Other versions can unlock by just hitting Enter. If you try to unlock a locked pixel, Photoshop will show you an error message. For example, if you have selected a pixel or a group of pixels that contain a duplicate layer, Photoshop will show you an error message explaining that you have selected locked and locked pixels. You should just click OK. The locked pixels will still not be unlocked.

Grouping Pixels. When you start to work on a photo, you can usually decide to not work on one portion of the image but on several. You can group pixels to more easily change, move, delete, or affect them all as one. Grouping is very useful when you want to work on several parts of the image at the same time. All the pixels in a group are treated as one unit and can be moved, deleted or edited as one unit.

How to group pixels To group pixels, select them and hit Ctrl+G. This will create a new group and move the selected pixels into the group. All the pixels in the group will be selected. You can select other
