The present invention relates to a variable rate control system for an internal combustion engine, and more particularly to a variable rate control system for an internal combustion engine which includes a variable valve event timing system. The engine must be controlled so that the output torque and/or output rotation speed can maintain a predetermined value. To make it meet this requirement, the engine is controlled by the ignition timing, injection timing and so forth to maintain the output torque and/or output rotation speed in a predetermined range. Variable valve events such as an ignition timing and an injection timing are usually controlled by a CAM (centralized adaptive mapping) system or a VEC (variable event control) system. Examples of these systems are disclosed in Japanese patent application laid open No. 58-34999 (JP58-34999A) and Japanese patent application laid open No. 58-125397 (JP58-125397A). FIG. 9 is a block diagram showing a typical conventional variable rate control system, which is also disclosed in the above two references. The system includes a cam position detecting means 40 which detects a cam position, a cam position controlling means 70 which controls a cam position of an internal combustion engine based on the output of the cam position detecting means 40, a spark timing controlling means 80 which controls the timing of a spark ignition, a fuel injection timing controlling means 90 which controls an injection timing for a fuel injection, a crank angle detecting means 50 which detects a crank angle of a crankshaft, an ignition timing controlling means 60 which controls an ignition timing based on the detection of the crank angle detecting means 50 and the output of the cam position controlling means 70. The relationship between the cam position and the control timings of the system are shown in FIG. 8. The pulse of a cam rotor 1 as a cam position detecting means 40 is used as a reference of time in the system. The cam position controlling means 70 controls the timing for one specific step of each of the engine control valves such as a spark timing controlling means 80 for spark ignition, a fuel injection timing controlling means 90 for fuel injection, an ignition timing controlling means 60 for an ignition timing, based on the output of the cam position detecting means 40. In the variable rate control system of the prior art, the timing, for each of the step, for each of the engine control valves, is controlled based on the output of the cam position detecting means. The engine control valves for each step are controlled based on the output of the cam position detecting means in a common
