You Can Still Get Your Ass Kicked at UConn It has been a rough week in the sports world. From the end of the UConn football season to Notre Dame's NCAA failure to compete and go to the Final Four. And now, UConn returns from a seven game losing streak and gets to play Rutgers on Friday. One day later, the Fighting Irish are preparing to host us from the Big East Championship. They are now 16-10 under the leadership of Kelly. There is little doubt in my mind that this season will be his second best on record. But then, UConn is ready to welcome both teams to the UConn Family. We already went through the drama with the last two UConn teams, and had a lot of fun doing it. But, with this UConn team, things are about to get interesting. I want to preface this by saying that the season has not been bad. Sure, we played some ugly games. But there is also a lot of talent and fun to be had. It's also worth noting that no team has yet to beat UConn this season. You could blame it on the fact that Maryland is now UConn's conference rival. Well, we will find out this week as UConn plays Maryland for the first time since the home and home in January. The No. 22 Terrapins are the preseason favorite to win the Big East and are quite the team this season. And this UConn team, of course, is led by the Big East's leading scorer. Now that's a lot of pressure on Auriemma, but I'm sure he has the Huskies ready. Up first, UConn will have to contend with No. 16 Rutgers. There is no denying that the Scarlet Knights are very good. The Huskies are not, however, and this is the type of game where UConn will need to win by five, if not more. But, despite the instability in the starting line up, the Huskies are still 8-1 and have a lot of talent. If UConn can get past Rutgers, then it should be smooth sailing from there. The Orange are 6-11 and are considered a fringe Big East team, e79caf774b
