Democratic presidential front-runner, for her communications that could risk the security of U.S. classified information. The latest revelation involving the Secret Service comes from a former top member of Clinton's campaign, who says the Secret Service was trying to find out who was using a private server in Clinton's New York home, The Hill reported. Cheryl Mills, the chairwoman of Clinton's presidential campaign, and a longtime aide to Clinton, used the server to communicate on State Department business, Bloomberg News reported on Wednesday. Mills served as both Clinton's chief of staff at the State Department and a lawyer in the Rose Law Firm. Mills is expected to testify during the U.S. Senate's investigation into Clinton's handling of classified information. Mills sent or received government emails from Clinton on her private account, according to a source familiar with the emails. The former State Department employee who spoke to The Hill said the plan was to "see if it was a resident or a visitor." It was also unclear whether Mills was worried that someone was illegally hacking the server or trying to get close enough to Clinton to get inside information that could be used in a scandal. The Hill first reported Mills' knowledge of the server in March. Mills is one of several top Clinton aides being investigated by the FBI over the Clinton Foundation's work in Haiti and the Sudan, Fox News reported.
