Roblox is a free massively multiplayer online game that operates under a freemium business model. The gameplay is built on a gaming engine and it is available online through a website and as a mobile app. Users create their own games and other digital content through a graphical programming interface, which makes it possible to create games without any programming or design experience. The company does not limit the functions of the programs, however, it reserves the right to remove games which it deems inappropriate or abusive. It provides moderation tools, and uses a security system to monitor and ban suspicious users. In addition to online gaming, it includes a social platform for game developers and users to collaborate on and share games. Gameplay:[..] The platform is a free online game service where players choose an avatar and customize their virtual world. They can also invite friends to visit their game. To keep the server running, Roblox has a freemium business model that offers in-game items, called blox, to users for free. Players can use blox to customize their virtual world, and to purchase virtual items for their avatar. Users can save blox points for free purchases. Roblox also promotes social gameplay through the in-game chat system, where players can trade virtual items, discuss game creations, and participate in various in-game events. The service features different game genres, with a focus on building, sandbox, and first-person shooter games. There is no specific in-game currency. Players purchase Robux, the game's virtual currency, with real money and use it to customize items, access restricted areas, and play multiplayer games. Robux can be purchased with PayPal accounts and credit cards directly on the Roblox website. Prior to September 2018, Robux was only redeemable for in-game items that were not related to gameplay. Money Making Exploits: Players can earn additional Robux by finishing games they have started, by drawing Robux from user-made content that is sold on the site, and by referring friends and family to the site. According to data collected by Roblox in August 2019, the average daily Robux yield was about 1,000 Robux. The company noted that during the holiday season, their Robux yield was more than 5,000. Roblox has many ways to make money, however, users sometimes exploit some of the less legitimate methods. To earn Robux, users can cheat by using illicit programs, modifying games by adding unauthorized features and earning Rob
