Edit I updated OpenCL version to opencl-1.1.0. The result of findstr command is printed in terminal.

The word "suspect" being defined (from Merriam-Webster.com) "a person, especially a male person, who is regarded as a possible offender or a person who has been accused of a crime." After the 9/11 attacks I was part of a group that went out to "protest" the U.S. flight ban into the U.S. It was an interesting experience. While part of the entire group had planned ahead to be "pro-American" by wearing a full scale American flag on our right-front torsos, many in the larger group of 270 went out with just our U.S. flag. That way we could still claim "protest" while still being seen as "good Americans." If you didn't know any better, or maybe didn't have a clue, you'd think these guys were very patriotic. Our style of protesting was sporadic, intermittent and non-violent, but felt a little forced as we argued with TSA officials over the ban and what could be done about it. The official TSA response to the ban was the absolute and definite "NO!" reaction.

It was at this point that I made my first mistake. I asked if I could put "Defend Our 2nd Amendment" or "Proud Americans" stickers on my chest. One official flatly refused. I don't remember exactly what she said, but she basically told me it was a and strength of workpieces that undergo complex geometrical and material changes during processing are of increasing interest in recent years. This is seen, for example, in the case of turbine blades, where an increase in the operating temperature for the gas turbine leads to a rise in the thermal and mechanical loads on the turbine blade. Particularly exposed to this thermal and mechanical load are the inside and the outside walls of the turbine blade. One possibility for reducing the thermal and mechanical loads of turbine blades is to reduce the temperature and the mechanical loading of the base material of the turbine blade. One approach to this is to produce turbine blades whose walls are formed of a material which can better withstand thermal and mechanical loads. Also, a problem with the cooling systems that are frequently used with turbine blades is that they frequently achieve their cooling effect only over a very short region of the interior of the wall of the turbine blade. A turbine blade is usually composed of a root part and a blade part, which are connected via hinged joints. It is, moreover, customary to provide an undercut for the support of the root part at its underside. With a view to improving the strength and the stiffness of the blade part, it is known to refine, in a so-called elongation zone, an inner wall of the blade part, which inner wall is located opposite the root part. The elongation zone is produced by impressing the blade part and the root part with pressure and heat during a heat treatment of the blade part and root part, and deformation of the material of the blade part and the root part takes place in an area which is to be refined. This deformation produces a longitudinal elongation, which is usually arranged transverse to the axis of the blade part. With the aid of this production process, the blade wall can be formed in such a way
